

Now Announcing: Senior Housing News Architecture & Design Awards Winners 2016

More than 80 organizations compete for top honors in the 2016 SHN Architecture & Design Awards.

(PRWEB) December 15, 2016 -- Senior Housing News, an Aging Media Network publication, is pleased to announce the winners of the 2016 Senior Housing News (SHN) Architecture & Design Awards.

Senior living communities nationwide submitted their communities for consideration in the fourth annual SHN Awards, a contest that recognizes excellence by celebrating projects that improve the lives of seniors through innovative design. This year's competition included the addition of two new project categories: Student Exhibition and International.

"With advances in technology, operations and design, this year brought truly innovative projects to senior living. As residents become more selective, senior living owners and operators are looking to design as a differentiator," said SHN Publisher and Founder George Yedinak. "This year's entries demonstrate the heightened competition across the sector."

From the more than 80 organizations that entered their communities in this year's competition, only nine projects were selected as 2016 SHN Architecture & Design Awards Winners for their unique approaches to senior living design. The competition evaluates communities through a scoring system that looks at various categories including design elements specific to each category, community integration, amenities and lifestyle features.

The 2016 competition was sponsored exclusively by Kwalu, a provider of senior living furniture solutions to communities across the United States.

"This year's winners continue to demonstrate an incredible amount of innovative ideas in their respective categories to enhance the wellbeing of their residents. The Senior Housing News Architecture and Design Awards competition has continued to grow and expand over the years including this year's two new categories," said Kwalu CEO Michael Zusman.
